If an external magnetic field is applied, the number of possible orientations calculated by $(2l+1)$.

Hydrogen has spin quantum number $l=1/2$ and possible orientation is $(2 \cdot 1/2 + 1 = 2)$ two $+1/2$ and $-1/2$.

Diagram 1: Energy level splitting. A single energy level $E = E_0$ splits into two levels: $E = E_0 + \mu_B B$ (spin state $l = +1/2$) and $E = E_0 - \mu_B B$ (spin state $l = -1/2$). The splitting is labeled 'Field strength'.

Diagram 2: Magnetic field with spin-up and spin-down orientations.

Slide Content:

The gap between the adjacent electronic state is usually very high (10^{19} J/mol to eV²) compared to thermal energy (4.12×10^{-21} J) at room temperature. So a molecule can not be excited by increasing the temperature to the 2nd excited electronic state.

With the increase of temperature the bond dissociates in the ground electronic state before attaining the higher electronic state. With the increase of temperature only the vibrational and rotational excitation occurs following Boltzmann distribution.

At higher electronic state the charge cloud of the bonding electrons become more diffuse. So at higher electronic state even at the -10^{19} level, the dissociation energy becomes greater than the equilibrium bond length of the ground electronic state. Because the bond becomes less stable than at the ground level, so dissociation energy decreases and the potential energy well becomes shallower and the depth also decreases. In PE Diagram shifts slightly towards right.

At even higher electronic state the bond distance further increases and the PE Diagram becomes more shallow with lower dissociation energy. In this way the electronic excitation may lead the molecule to such a state that the attractive force of the PE curve does not exist, the molecule does not exhibit rotovibronic coupling that the bond is not at all stable at this electronic state. The PE Diagram only possesses repulsive part. When the molecule is excited to this electronic level, the bond dissociates immediately.
